MARTIN
BUCKLEY

The MGA, launched in 1955, was the first 'modern' MG and proudly upheld the traditional MG virtues of sporting performance and handling, while its clean lines won it many admirers. Today all the MGA models – the 1500 and 1600 roadsters and coupés, and the Twin-Cam – enjoy an ever more enthusiastic following.

The MGB, introduced in 1962, was a natural successor and was the most successful MG ever, remaining in production until 1980 and spawning GT, lusty six-cylinder C and V8 derivatives.

Martin Buckley, a regular contributor to Classic and Sportscar, examines these cars from today's standpoint. He describes their appeal, their usability and the pleasures of ownership. For the owner and prospective originality, and takes the prospective purchaser through a checklist of important points. Full specifications and performance figures are given, as well as lists of parts suppliers, repairers and restorers. Over 120 illustrations – some specially commissioned, some from archive sources – give a full pictorial record of the cars,

The Classic and Sportscar File series features hard facts and practical advice for today's enthusiasts. Also published are:
